Dear Mr. Recruiter,

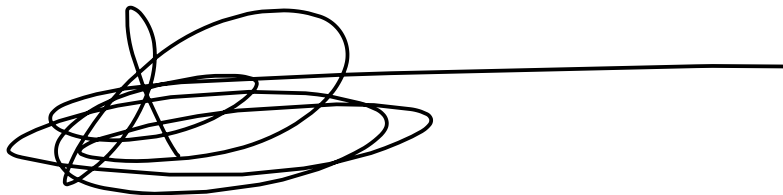

I have been obsessed with coding and website design since I was a junior in high school. The process of making your own code and debugging it to perfect it and make it the best way possible is amazing to me. I would like to continue doing that by applying for Customer Development Representative. I am interested in this position because of my love for helping others while also problem solving to come up with a better solution for everyone. I've been a user of Google applications and products for years and I really admire the flexibility with them compared to thing produced by competitor. I am not going into this without a goal in mind. My main goal is to find a place where I can conduct work but also be able to not stress myself out and have some fun.

In my high school class, I was in the top 20% of students there while also being able to maintain an A average throughout all 4 years. So my ability to consistently perform at the best of my ability is without a doubt, top tier. I have been a bright mind since I was a child, making it easier for me to come up with ideas on the go and process information told at a moments notice. My ability to do this could be useful whenever helping customers solve problems as this position requires problem solving. Finally, my favorite pastime is helping my family members whenever they are having trouble with their devices. I feel that it makes me more suitable and able to help any type of customer no matter what the request is.

My other goal is to have a place that can challenge my thought process causing me to work harder. I believe that if you aren't working hard, then you aren't working at all which is something that I stand by. I will contribute hard work and dedication to this company day-in and day-out no matter what the request or job is. Thank you for your time and I hope you have a wonderful day.

Sincerely,

Jalen Session
